

Amaia Ibarra is a lecturer at the University of the Basque Country since 1999, where she teaches contemporary North American Literature and Minorities. Her research has always been focused on the study of Chicano Literature, art and culture, and she has published several articles and co edited books in this field. Her current research deals with the literary production of the new generation of Chicano writers as well as with the study of other forms of popular artistic and cultural expression produced by the Chicano community.